

THE CORPORATE LIBRARY LAUNCHES NEW BLOG OFFERING EXPERT COMMENTARY ON CORPORATE GOVERNANCE RISK AND EXECUTIVE COMPENSATION

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Portland, Maine; May 7, 2009 – The Corporate Library, the leading independent source for corporate governance and executive compensation research and risk analysis, today announced the launch of a company blog. The blog provides timely commentary on trends and issues in corporate governance risk and executive compensation from The Corporate Library’s team of top experts as well as information about the company’s products and services.

“We are excited for The Corporate Library to take a leading role in the online conversation about corporate governance and compensation issues,” said Richard A. Bennett, Chief Executive Officer of The Corporate Library. “The Corporate Library Blog will be an important means for us to contribute our intellectual firepower and long experience in assessing governance risk to an increasingly attentive world, and to build a useful, informative forum for our clients.”

The Corporate Library provides institutional investors, investment managers, and director and officer (D&O) liability insurers with research on corporate governance risk to help enhance investment returns and protect against unnecessary exposures.

Expert bloggers for The Corporate Library Blog include:

- Editor and Co-Founder Nell Minow, dubbed “the queen of good corporate governance” by BusinessWeek in 2003;
- Co-Founder Robert A.G. Monks, pioneer of shareholder activism and leading thinker on corporate governance;
- Director of Research and Ratings Kimberly Gladman, CFA, Ph.D., accomplished researcher in governance as well as socially responsible investing;
- Chief Analyst Ric Marshall, a prominent speaker on corporate governance risk in the investment and D&O insurance industries;
- Senior Research Associate Paul Hodgson, renowned executive and board compensation authority;
- Senior Research Associate Beth Young, widely known for her expertise in shareholder issues, mergers and acquisitions, and takeover defenses; and
- Senior Research Associate Annalisa Barrett, accomplished researcher in the area of board and governance practices.
